Section F: Comprehension MCQ (5 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 28 to 30.

One April afternoon a few days after my twenty-first birthday, my parents announced that they were ready to give me - their live-at-home, frazzled, college-student daughter - a belated birthday present. Wheelchair-bound since birth, I propelled myself from my bedroom into the living room where my parents anxiously waited.

"Bring it on! Good things come to those who wait," I joked, as I crossed my eyes and extended my hands, waiting to feel the weight of a beautifully wrapped gift. "Why are you holding out your hands?" my father laughed. "Your gift isn't coming in a box this year."

"Huh?" I opened my eyes to study the glee stamped on both of their usually calm faces. "I know! It must be that handicapped-accessible van I've been praying for!"

"No, it's not a van, but it's almost as good," my mother chuckled. "Today, right now, in fact," my father broke in, "we're going to a place where you'll be able to select the puppy of your choice."

"But," I stammered, but there was no time for protest as he scooped me out of my chair and into our car. My parents chatted to each other while I sat in the back, desperately trying to quell overwhelming waves of sadness.

Sadness because not so long ago, this trip would have seemed incomprehensible - a betrayal. After all, it had been only three years since Buck lay on my cold bathroom floor motionless. Sobbing, I vowed to him and to myself that I would never get another dog. But now here I was, about to break that promise. Soon, we reached our destination. A chorus of barks and howls heralded our arrival, as a friendly employee offered to show us the available puppies. Soon, I heard my father call out, "Over here."

Intrigued, my heart began to race as I pushed toward the pen where my parents stood. Struggling to get a better look, I hoisted myself up, my legs tightening with the effort. There, nestled in the pen, were two angelic shih tzus. The male, a fluffy caramel and white pup, was gregarious and charged right at me. His smaller sister, a beautiful midnight-black-and-white puppy, was more demure, waiting for me to lean in a bit, before licking my nose. "Aww, she looks like Buck," I said silently, my heart beginning to soften. Then suddenly, before I knew what was happening, my resolve toppled. I was hooked.

I was leaning toward the male; he was obviously the alpha and far more playful. Yet, the girl was so tiny, her ebony eyes captivating and sweet. I was hopelessly undecided.

The employee, observing my deadlock, lowered his voice to a whisper and said, "Look, if I were you, I'd take the boy because the female's disabled. Her legs are deformed; she stands like a ballerina in first position."

Stunned at his insensitivity, my eyes widened and I looked at my legs.

Noticing my expression, the employee continued, "I don't mean to upset you, but she'll need constant care. And the last thing you probably need is another pile of doctor bills."

"Okay... I'll take him," I said sadly.

As we were saying our good-byes to the little female, she struggled back up. Her eyes bursting with determination, she pushed her brother out of the way and then carefully placed one foot in front of the other as she began her slow, steady ascent across my lap and up my shirt. She wobbled and stumbled but didn't stop until she rested against my heart.

Laughing and crying at the same time, I whispered, "I hear you, Ballerina Dog. You're coming home with me." Contented, she closed her eyes, knowing her mission was complete. We would manage whatever care she needed; it would all work out.

"Excuse me, sir," I announced loudly, "there's been a change of plans. I'm taking Ballerina Dog."

Section K: Comprehension Open-Ended (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage and answer the questions 71 to 80.

At once, I knew it was Sebastian. I darted behind a passer-by so that I could get in for a closer look at his face. Every morsel of him was still there, fresh on my memory.

I left Sebastian fifteen years ago. I had no choice. We never could make ends meet. When Li Shian offered me a way out, I took it as I craved to escape the torturous life in Kampang Amman. I came to Singapore and started anew, eventually marrying Li Shian. However, Sebastian was always on my mind. Did we not use to roam the little paths and teach each other so much about life? Did we not picnic on simple bread and butter while the little stream ran its course into the unknown? How could you forget someone for whom you would have sacrificed your life?

Li Shian must have known about Sebastian but he did not question. Neither did he ask why I had to make this trip to Penang. He understood that I had to complete this chapter of my life.

"Ladies and gentlemen," the organiser raised his voice. "We are very glad to have Mr Sebastian Yap signing his second book, 'Streaming On'. If you will form a line here, please, Mr Yap will be signing your copy." I joined the queue with the book pressed on my chest. I peered round to admire Sebastian putting words on paper.

It was my turn. Sebastian's fleeting smile was followed by a pregnant pause. "Is he searching the vestige of his memory for the one who had given him up?" I thought apprehensively and prayed he would not toss my book to the ground.

"You have read this book many times," he said, fingering the dog-ears. "Four," I replied mechanically. As he scribbled on the title page, my eyes fell on his left palm, awkwardly close to the writing hand. It was smudged with ink from the fountain pen. How many times had I smacked that very same hand whilst teaching him to write properly? Yet, it was the same one I kissed again on those very same evenings while he was asleep! Finally, he handed the book to me with both hands. I dashed through the door before he could get up and notice my tear-filled eyes. Not that he would be getting up, to him, I was just another autograph hunter.

On the train back to Singapore, I mustered enough energy to open the book. He had written this message: 'Those many picnics by the stream, all motivation for my dreams. I love you Mum. Forever your son, Sebastian.' A drop of tear fell, smudging 'Those'.
